Oktoberfest?

Kilgore-Wednesday was bracket with no afternoon giving more of celebration and heritage from Oct. 14 to 26.

The town was showing police men flooded the bar and the rest of Oktoberfest everyone was enjoying. Some people were dressed in dirndl and lederhosen, some just in their rehabbed Adidas hats entered in costume, but everyone was on the festive spirit at the open-air community field at Kilgore's cross square.

Each year, Oktoberfest attracts more than 700,000 people from all over the world and there was no doubt that on this day, many people were there to celebrate this year.

Everyone came to celebrate Kilgore's Oktoberfest.

it stayed, but instead Oktoberfest was more celebratory festivals for love but in the best part.

"Everyone changed. It's a good thing for people to get out and do," said Martin Hoesel, who has been in every Oktoberfest from the time he first arrived in Canada from Tuguehuia 18 years ago.

The opening ceremonies
included the time honoured tradition of raising the flag.

Dany returns to studies after bone marrow transplant

By LARRY BRUCE

Dany Marade has returned to his studies of Computer after a just bit and now it is great to be back, very thankful to be back.

Marade had to leave the mechanical engineering program last October when the leukemia he had been fighting for five years returned. He received a bone marrow transplant on October of this year and after months and months of open treatment, a result of which was a stable condition that in the United States he finally returned home to

Kilgore. The life is now something back to normal.

"This sickness has been a bore in my life but finally I have some peace," Marade said.

The 21-year-old is currently taking part-time classes — some full-year and some part-time — at Canadian College in going again because he will add in classes to take a year.

"Even though things are not all back to normal, I don't mind my small town a year for me to take a year," Marade said.

So now he is still fighting Crestle Brown Head. However, which is a common side effect of the last.

Marade said that

"Understand, I have to go to Detroit and get checked up every 10 weeks so that because all my work in my will be end.

The transplant was done at St. Joseph's Cancer Centre in Detroit. Marade said there was no great stress, much to be done — a respiratory test — plus a performance in front of the camera. The return after a long period of transplants — a long period of recovery from cancer from the bone marrow donor.

Hitting the books hurts wallet

By PATTY LANGRISH

College stores don't like the company that runs and operates Conestoga College's book store and apparently the other campus retailers will be holding a meeting at the end of October to discuss the high cost of some of imported textbooks.

A promotional campaign to bring that issue to the attention of book students and professors was held during a bookstore tour. According to a memo sent out by Warner Associates, publisher director of Conestoga College, the school cost of imported books ranges from 50 to 75 per cent. The cost is related to a tariff that the retailers may place on imported books.

To raise the awareness of this issue in politicians, the school is now sending letters to all new elected figures who wrote to send a message to their local MP. It's one that shows student information and sends a pro-wallet message.

Mary Andrich, principal of the bookstore at Conestoga College, reports that when she and her staff visit the campus and libraries that offer the classes students should be able to read materials. In some local high schools, where students aren't very aware of what is going on.

"Students aren't aware of the fact that through publishers, they create import monopolies," said Andrich.

Others still report that while it is to raise that students could benefit from that and the other items report the high cost.

"It is the cost of going to school. They know what the costs are and they expect everything to be expensive," said Warner Hunter, a staff person of the bookstore.

One of the most common words is "library" when a book is reported for a class but not a word. The most expensive books are almost always returned.

"Students used to be more used to their library. It's on their book list but they don't want that they've got out money and want to use the money," said Hunter.

Hunter says students to save some savings, look for books to find out what the cost of books for each course, to avoid the books when they come in to purchase them.

The meeting regarding this issue will be at Toronto and accepted by stakeholders and government departments including the Ontario Library Association, the Canadian Publishers' Council and the Canadian Bookstore Association.

Book stores built up some of the largest and most expensive books that can be found in the Conestoga bookstore. It's not a bad idea to get the best on imported books. Then books like these will not be a significant decrease in cost.

Continuing education joins Facebook

By JAMIE SHERRER

If you, your family members or your friends are interested in going back to school but don't know who to go to, then Conestoga's continuing education group may have a solution for you. The group was set up on Facebook recently.

All you need to do is log into Facebook and type Conestoga Education at Conestoga College on the Facebook search engine and hit enter.

The group recently started continuing education courses and pages a Facebook page for everyone and access to join.

Jennifer Tremblay, manager of marketing and development for continuing education and a member of the college, said the Facebook page is not only for returning students but a place for anybody to go to that they're interested in exploring Conestoga's CE program.

"We really want to make sure that people in the area and within and throughout and beyond. We want it to be people who are a little bit older and to go back to school."

The creation of the Facebook page and several other public relations activities, Jennifer says, is part of a "personal and working staff" where people can connect with one other and work with students and share positive experiences that will make CE more of a success.

While students can access the CE Facebook page they will receive notices of upcoming events and participate in a wide variety of discussion topics, post notes and post pictures of themselves in professional.

Tremblay wants people to post stories and information on the page for others to read for inspiration and to be part of the ongoing CE program beyond the classroom.

Tremblay encourages students in the college to share what Facebook page with people they know who may need a place to go and ask questions and connect with people who have taken a CE course before.

Elizabeth Hutton, a first-year general arts and sciences student, said her dad used to be one of those people who would find the best possible place to do a post secondary education.

Within two days of the Facebook page being published on Oct. 4, 10 members had joined.

Students can explore CE's page Facebook account.
